ALDE Party Congress
2-4 June 2022
Dublin, Ireland

#ALDEcongress

The Alliance of Liberals and Democrats for Europe (ALDE) Party is the party representing liberal democrat values across Europe. With our member parties throughout Europe, we are translating the principle of freedom into politics, economics and across all other areas of our societies. The ALDE Party provides an increasingly vital link between citizens and the EU institutions. The ALDE Party is made up of more than sixty member parties and many individual members from across Europe.

Liberal Bulletin is a publication of the ALDE Party. It is published twice a year.

EDITORIAL

Dear liberal friends,

The year is soon coming to a close, and what a year it has been. From difficult and sad moments to celebrations and successes, our liberal family has experienced it all in 2021. But together we have persevered, innovated and kept moving forward, stronger than ever.

One of the key projects for us this year has been the Conference on the Future of Europe, which places citizens at the core of discussions. That is what politics is essentially about and that is why we here at ALDE Party have been committed to doing our part. Together with partners and member parties we have organised town halls – named after our late president Hans van Baalen – across the continent with a focus on topics that matter the most to Europe's future. You can learn more about our liberal vision and how you can get involved in the pages of this Liberal Bulletin.

Throughout the year, we have also highlighted several important topics that touch the lives of many Europeans, from supporting the rights of LGBTIQ+ community in Hungary to fighting against vaccine disinformation, and more. The recent events at the Poland-Belarus border are a further reminder as to why the work we do every day matters and why the fight for a better and more just Europe continues to be the guiding principle of our member parties and liberal leaders at all levels of politics.

What makes me particularly happy is that we have slowly been able to move away from the virtual world and back to 'business as usual'. I hope this trend continues in 2022. Nothing is more valuable to us and our members than to be able to connect in person with each other, whether colleagues, voters, volunteers or those who don't share our beliefs and points of view. We all know that dialogue works best in person, where any misunderstandings more easily can be resolved in a constructive manner. That is why I am delighted to end our year with the ALDE Party Council meeting in Rome and meet many of you face to face – it has been too long!

I wish you all a joyful festive season and a great beginning for the new year.

Jacob Moroza-Rasmussen
ALDE Party Secretary General

RECOVER AND RENEW – EUROPE’S LIBERALS ARE READY

With normalcy returning and Europe becoming ready to recover and renew, the liberal family continues to play an active part at all levels of government. We spoke with ALDE Party acting co-Presidents Senator Timmy Dooley and Ilhan Kyuchyuk MEP to hear how they have experienced this challenging time in Europe’s history and what their expectations are for the months ahead.

How would you describe these past months as ALDE Party co-President?

TD: The role has come about from a position of great sadness, as it followed the passing of Hans van Baalen – someone we all admired and whose guidance and stewardship we valued. It has been a challenging time for Ilhan and I also because of the restrictions on travel, which have made it difficult to meet with all the member parties and political leaders we would have hoped to meet with. But, now that the situation is improving across Europe, we are looking forward to being able to do this and attend more in-person events.

IK: It has indeed been an intense time, with key meetings and discussions taking place with prime ministers, regional leaders and member parties. I am confident that if we keep going forward on our common path, we will achieve great results together as a liberal family.

“We have the necessary vision, creativity and ambition to change this shared project for the better”

Despite the continued challenges globally, which liberal achievements or successes have made you the proudest in 2021?

TD: Bringing several liberal leaders together ahead of the EU-Western Balkans Summit in October was a big achievement for ALDE Party. Based on my discussions with the leaders, they really value coordination, coming together to try and build a consensus around important topics and communicating about them afterwards in a united way. Having so many of our Prime Ministers and even some of our Commissioners joining really gives an impetus to build strong ties between the liberal parties across Europe. This, in my view, will help us to be active players in the European Council, Commission and Parliament.

IK: Echoing Timmy’s words, the EU-Western Balkans Summit was a success. Despite some bilateral challenges, we were able to come up with a strategy towards integrating the Western Balkan countries, which is something I am very proud of. These countries belong to the European Union geographically and historically, but they also need to be connected politically. Economic investments can play a key role in this, connecting not only the region but also people.

“Now is the best time to shape the European project, and it is in our liberal hands”

And what do you think are the most urgent issues for Europe to tackle in 2022?

TD: The aftermath of the COVID-19 crisis, notably rebuilding our economies, is the single biggest challenge. While we want our economies to grow, there is a risk of significant inflation. So, we need to find ways to manage those two competing interests in the months and years to come.

IK: We have a myriad of important issues to deal with: migration, being better prepared for future crises and so on. And we shouldn’t forget the Conference on the Future of Europe. This initiative is key in shaping the European perspective in the Western Balkans, for example, but should also send the right message when it comes to reforming the EU. EU citizens are right when they say they like the EU but they don’t like how the institutions work.

It is time to change some things, and the Conference is a great tool to achieve this. Yet, it should not be used only for consulting citizens but also take their voices and opinions to the level where decisions are made.

The liberal family will come together for ALDE Party Council meeting in Rome. What are your hopes and expectations for this meeting?

TD: I am really looking forward to the Council Meeting as it will be the first opportunity to meet in person again. We have missed that. Us liberals, we like to engage with each other, we like to talk, to discuss, to socialise, to raise a glass together... All this has obviously been missing from online interactions. The Council will also be an important moment to start planning for the next ALDE Party Congress that will take place in Dublin in June 2022.

IK: I hope that as many delegates as possible can come together and that we will have opportunities to discuss the future of the EU as well as that of ALDE Party. Now is the best time to shape the European project, and it is in our liberal hands. We have the necessary vision, creativity and ambition to change this shared project for the better.

EUROPE'S FUTURE IS ALREADY HERE – NOW IS THE TIME TO ACT!

Since the launch of the Conference on the Future of Europe earlier this year, Europe's liberals have played an active role in ensuring that the project is a genuinely democratic process that offers citizens the chance to make their voices heard.

In spring 2021, ALDE Party established six high-level priorities that provide concrete solutions to some of the biggest challenges that Europe and the global community are facing, from climate change to economic recovery and innovation.

The liberal action plan also includes a series of town hall meetings held across Europe together with our member parties and partners, as well as a dedicated final conference where all inputs are brought together. You can find the full list of priorities and upcoming events on our website at aldeparty.eu/cofoe

Moreover, different liberal actors and partners have been active on this topic throughout the year, including through:

EVENTS: our member parties across Europe have been hosting their own events related to Europe's future and discussing priorities for the coming years

MEETINGS: MPs from our member parties have played a key role in the European Parliament plenaries dedicated to the Conference on the Future of Europe

CAUCUSES: MEPs from the Renew Europe Group have brought an EU-wide liberal voice to the conversation through a range of platforms, such as political caucuses

REGIONAL DISCUSSIONS: Liberal Mayors from the Renew Europe Group in the European Committee of the Regions have been bringing a regional perspective into the discussions

PUBLICATIONS: The European Liberal Forum has launched 'Liberal White Book 2030', a visionary publication that lays down the road to a free, fair and strong Europe

YOUTH PERSPECTIVE: The European Liberal Youth LYMEC has highlighted the role Europe's youth should play in the discussions and in creating a future that takes the younger generation into account

HAVE YOUR SAY

What is your idea for Europe's future? In addition to setting high-level liberal priorities and hosting town hall meetings, we have given citizens the opportunity to submit their own ideas for a European future that is better, fairer and greener.

Citizens have been able to submit their ideas through our dedicated digital hub as well as during our Hans van Baalen town hall meetings. The numerous ideas submitted so far have covered themes such as increasing the knowledge of Europeans on what Europe can do for them and giving EU citizens the right to vote in national elections. Some of these ideas will also be debated further with key liberal policymakers at the upcoming high-level ALDE Party Conference which will bring together the insights from our journey across Europe.

Interested to know what others have proposed? Some of the submitted ideas are included below.

There is a huge need for citizens to understand better what Europe is allowed to do or what it can do; for that, first better education on Europe for citizens is needed and secondly better communication from the Union to the citizens.

B.B., Belgium

Political thinking must be long-term. Sustainable resource use and net-zero emissions must be included in every aspect of new policies and governance.

S.T., Denmark

Strengthening the individual personality through improved education and intelligent social balance.

HANS VAN BAALEN TOWN HALLS TAKE US ACROSS EUROPE

Since this autumn, we have been bringing together citizens and liberal politicians across Europe at our Hans van Baalen town hall meetings. The main goal? To put citizens at the core of discussions about Europe's future. From Sarajevo to Madrid and beyond, we have covered key themes, such as combatting populism, the role of liberalism for Europe's future, the opportunities created by EU recovery funds, the Western Balkans perspective, and more.

The events have been held together with our member parties and partners. Moreover, some of our member parties have hosted their own events focused on the future of Europe under this same framework.

STRONGER TOGETHER

European Commission Vice-President Věra Jourová champions topics crucial for Europe's future. From leading the Commission's work on values and transparency to ensuring that democratic systems are open and transparent, she believes in a Europe that leads by example. In this exclusive interview, Jourová shares her vision on fighting for gender equality and against disinformation, and explains why a united Europe is a strong Europe.

The Conference on the Future of Europe is a unique democratic exercise that gives Europeans an opportunity to express their hopes and concerns for the continent's future. But how can we ensure that the voice of citizens is heard and that real changes are achieved?

Let me start by saying that I am a strong believer in this project. We really need to have as broad a discussion as possible about the vision for Europe. Currently, 70% of Europeans say that while the EU is a good place to live in, reforms are needed. With 800 citizens directly involved in the Conference, it has been very refreshing for me – after seven years of living here – to hear perspectives from outside of the Brussels Bubble.

It is good to keep in mind that the Conference is not about the process but about the result. We are committed to working with people's contributions and doing our best to reflect most opinions. But this is far from an easy exercise and not everybody will be happy. However, we are truly making the effort to connect with citizens, like we did for example during the Strasbourg plenary in October, and we are also listening to what young people have to say.

Speaking of Europe's future, the rapid rise in the spread of disinformation and fake news is challenging our societies, from vaccine disinformation to fake news around elections. You have played an instrumental role in strengthening the European Commission's Code of Practice on this topic. In your view, what concrete steps can Member States, EU institutions and citizens take to fight back?

Disinformation is a very dynamic and complex phenomenon. There have always been rumours and there have always been people who have been misled by them. But, today's amplifiers, like social media platforms, have given this phenomenon a new impetus and new strengths. During the pandemic, we have witnessed cases where disinformation has harmed or even killed people. We started working on the Code of Practice back in 2018, and it seems to me that many people now realise that we were right in starting this work.

What will not happen in Europe, at least not while I set the agenda, is establishing some official arbiters of truth, such as some social media boss or a prime minister. This is not what we want. Instead of just removing content we must bring in the facts: facts are objective, opinions belong to an individual. This is hard work and we need societies and citizens on board to check information and fight for facts. I think the platforms should display the lie and the evidence-based truth side by side, so that the users can see both.

“A more united Europe without compromising or negotiating our values is my hope”

I speak about facts because as someone who works on topics related to disinformation, or rather anti-disinformation, I have a horrible dilemma. I often hear, especially at the European Parliament, opinions which I don't like from representatives of the far right or far left. But, unless the political parties expressing these opinions are classified as extremists, as a true liberal who believes in the right to express one's opinion, I have the duty to protect the right of these groups to do so, whether I agree with them or not. Like John Stuart Mill said in the 19th century, if we start silencing somebody's voice, we are not liberals.

In addition to more fact checking, we need to also do more against foreign interference, which can constitute a security threat. We need to establish an effective system of sanctions and also demonetise disinformation. In other words, producing and spreading disinformation must not be a lucrative business. At the moment, it is very profitable, and that is why we work with different platforms, the advertising industry and the media to fight back.

Disinformation is a complex phenomenon that requires complex solutions – there is no silver bullet. But we really do not want to do it the Chinese way. That is not Europe and it will never be Europe.

There is still a lot to do when it comes to gender equality as well. Quoting you, “gender should be everywhere” – how do you think we can incorporate this important perspective at local, national and European levels?

To me, gender equality is a matter of fairness and I think that is what I meant when I said that gender should be everywhere. Of course, it already is, but it comes with a big but. I believe this century will be the century of women, because we want to take more responsibility for the state of the world. And I am certain that the world will be a better place as a result.

“Disinformation is a complex phenomenon that requires complex solutions – there is no silver bullet”

60% of university graduates are female, and yet only 3% of CEOs, 18% of management board members and 30% of parliamentarians are women. You cannot help but think how we can afford this horrible loss of talent. It is not rational or economical, and first and foremost it is unfair. I believe we must decrease the pay gap because we need to implement measures that will protect women's economic standing.

Moreover, we need more women in decision-making positions. I know that some are in favour of using quotas while others are not. I am in favour of quotas when we first consider education, qualifications and ability and, when we have comparable candidates in these regards, we give priority to the underrepresented gender.

Violence against women is also an issue we need to urgently tackle. I am not only talking about domestic violence, which has increased at an alarming rate during the COVID-19 pandemic, but also about violence that takes place online. There is a negative trend of attacking female journalists, female politicians, female representatives of NGOs, and so on. Women who make themselves heard on topics with significant public interest are often immediately harassed. The European Commission wants to propose a legislation to decrease this type of violence and to implement the necessary punishments.

The end of the year is always a good moment to reflect on what's to come. What are your own personal hopes for Europe's future, 5-10 years from now?

I wish Europe to be more united and stronger with regard to the rest of the world. The only way to achieve this is to be and stay united. I think there is a reason why the European Union was able to transform itself from a community centred around the single market to a union which is more like a family with shared values.

“ I believe this century will be the century of women ”

However, I would like to witness more common understanding of this, starting with the question which values connect us. At the moment, we are in a crisis when it comes to rule of law and democratic processes, and the low trust people have in democratic institutions continues to be a serious issue. There have also been attacks on minorities, and people's fundamental rights have been under threat.

Simply put, I believe that by being stronger on these issues, the European Union will be stronger as a whole and can become a more effective partner for the democratic allies across the world. In an interconnected world, we need to lead by example.

A more united Europe without compromising or negotiating our values is my hope.

JOYEUX ANNIVERSAIRE

175 YEARS OF BELGIAN LIBERALISM

The Belgian liberal parties Mouvement Réformateur (MR) and Open Vld are celebrating their 175th anniversary this year. In this interview, party leaders Georges-Louis Bouchez (MR) and Egbert Lachaert (Open Vld) give an insight into the history and future of one of the oldest political parties in continental Europe. 175 years on, they continue to fight for the liberal cause with the same enthusiasm and passion as ever!

Georges-Louis Bouchez, Egbert Lachaert, what does 175 years of liberalism mean for Belgium?

GLB: First of all, it's important to stress that liberals played a decisive role in the creation of the Belgian State and in the evolution that made our country prosperous: our Constitution from 1830 was widely regarded as 'the most liberal in the world' at the time and, on the eve of the First World War, Belgium was the fifth industrial power in the world. This situation is the result of the historical battles that liberals have fought to achieve freedom and progress.

EL: In the 19th century, it was liberals who founded the Belgian National Bank and the Crédit Communal and who heavily invested in infrastructure, such as railways. These steps made our country a major industrial player. In the 20th and 21st centuries, we have never stopped fighting for free enterprise, low taxes and easy access to the labour market, all of which form the foundation of a prosperous economy.

Now, 175 years after the birth of the Belgian liberal movement, we can also proudly say that we are the ones who freed our education system from the influence of the church. We have always fought against fascism, extremism, and populism, and were one of the key contributors to our modern social security in Belgium.

And what does this fight for freedoms mean to you?

GLB: These liberal battles for the freedom of conscience, of expression, of association, of education, of religion, of sexual orientation, of enterprise as well as political freedom, free trade and the freedom to die with dignity are all battles that have led to the expansion of individual freedoms for citizens in Belgium and abroad.

EL: Yes, as liberals we can be proud of this heritage. But we cannot stop here. Today, more than ever, we continue to fight to reduce the tax burden on the middle and working classes, thus rewarding work more. The institutions of our complex, federal country must also be enhanced. We liberals believe in merit, social mobility, and are strong advocates of equal opportunity and fair access to the labour market.

“The EU was an old liberal dream, and liberals were at the heart of its creation”

What about the European Union, how important is it for Belgian liberals?

GLB: The EU was an old liberal dream, and liberals were at the heart of its creation. The EU is first and foremost the realisation of a set of values and a common heritage, fully enshrined in our liberal thinking. Guaranteeing peace and prosperity, the EU is an important safeguard against the attacks on the rule of law.

Our member parties have the floor

EL: Liberals want to be the driving force for a new European dynamism! We want a European economy that is open to the world and that provides growth opportunities to all sectors.

As for the challenges that we face today, we believe in the need for a strong EU industrial policy. We want a global industrial strategy with a clear action plan. Such a policy is key for implementing the EU's new growth and job strategy as well as the Green Deal. We must also make the EU more resilient when faced with future crises.

GLB: Europe is also the right level to set exciting objectives for our youth. It is our duty to pass on a liveable planet to future generations. However, we are faced with an environmental challenge that requires not only mobilising all Europeans but also the determination of young people, who must be given the tools to transform their enthusiasm and vision into action, with energy and intelligence.

Linked to this, we need to focus on creating economic growth by putting full emphasis on science and technological innovations such as sustainable energy production, more efficient agriculture and zero emission transport. Technology is evolving rapidly, and it is only by investing in it that we will be able to tackle our present challenges. Forward-looking research and development and innovation policies will play a key role in enabling the EU and its Member States to make the most out of the green transition. And we shouldn't forget the importance of ambitious and inspiring European projects!
